-----. William Theobald (1829-1908): unwitting reformer of botanical nomenclature? Taxon 34 (1985) 152-156.

Unfortunate discovery of validly published names of Burmese plants in an obscure book, W. THEOBALD's edition of F. MASON's "The natural products of Burmah" (1883). Of many transfers Theobald has priority, among which several from Malesia and necessitating a new name for a Vaccinium from New Guinea: V. angulatum J.J. Sm., non Theob. = V. commutatum Mabb. & Sleum., nom. nov. Neptunia natans (L.f.) Druce is a later homonym, therefore N. oleracea Lour. has to be restored.

Lectures given a BIOTROP course in 1979 on the presence or absence of cyclic or intermittent behaviour of plants in shoot-elongation, leaf-production and -fall, bud dormancy and reproduction. A flushing tree would not harbour its foliage pests continuously and might even partially or completely escape attack if it can flush and consolidate before its pests can take advantage; trees in tropical monsoon climates therefore perhaps tend to flush during the dry season as the latter inhibits pests. Such and other observations make this a most interesting reading!
